[Redacted] I've sent a pre-pub review package to them as well.

The normal process for nonfiction is to submit a proposal to an agent or editor, and if you get a contract, write the book. I am doing just the opposite because I want a body of approved text before I start contacting potential publishers. At this stage, I have no leads on an agent or editor, though I am forming a contact plan.

I've documented large portions of this work in the end notes. I'll send those to you electronically for easy access to the URLs. These are publicly available sources, the primary one of which is [Redacted]. I've taken great care not to discuss "sources or methods," or any sensitive material and hope that you come to a similar conclusion.

While the book is very respectful of the institution, there are chapters that will not be without controversy. [Redacted]
